“ I used to joke with Trish that she didn't need to leave so early. She was done between 4-5pm and my shift wasn't over until after 7pm. Everyday I would tell her that I'd gotten the ok for her to stay. We would let giddy exhaustion keep this joke going for too long each time I passed her desk. The truth is the end of the day was harder when she wasn't around. There was a space she filled that no matter who sat in her chair, no matter how much we thought we knew, we couldn't do the work like her. Not with her smile, her laugh, her sassiness, or her way of showing love to those around her. I think that's how we're all feeling these days. You left early, Trish. We were hoping to have you longer.

Thank you for the mark you left on our lives. Thank you for sharing your whole self unapologetically with all you met. Thank you for the laughs and the advice, the funny stories about your boys. Thank you for being the first face I saw at East L&D when I was just a student and being at my bedside when I was sick. Thank you for all the work days you came through for me to make my day a little better. I hope I did the same for you. I know you are in the place of lasting peace and unending joy. I know God called you home and you felt all the warmth of His love. Each smiling picture I see of you and memory I read makes it feel like what you left behind was million pieces of yourself to help the rest of us to make it through our shift here.

“ Trish,
I started out my nursing career at CHE with the babies at the turn of the century. You were the glue that held the unit together then. I had the opportunity to come back at the beginning of the pandemic and imagine my surprise to learn you were still there holding the new and improved unit together. I looked forward to our chats when I printed out the census to begin my rounds. Thank you for the candy and the answers to all my questions. I just learned that Sherry is related. She's got the same talent of holding the NICU together the way you did maternity. You will be missed! Rest In Peace. Prayers for your family and the unit for the void that is left by your passing.
